1. On 19 March 1955, six high-ranking KVP officers dressed in civilian clothes visited the radio station at Koenigs-Wusterhausen. They were shown around by the station chief, Herzog (fnu). Nobody in the radio station knew beforehand who these persons were nor where they came from though it is customary to have such visits announced beforehand. Employees did learn that the officers came from Rostock.
2. The officers paid particular attention to the shortwave and microwave transmitters. According to their remarks, plans are being made for establishing a radar and microwave network to extend from Wismar to beyond Heringsdorf. It was apparent from their remarks that this future radar network was to be under the command of these officers.
3. The officers arrived from Berlin in automobiles, and departed in the same direction. It was surprising that no Berlin escort came along with them.
4. [redacted] it was evident that the officers were well trained technically.
